BIG MOOSE in BY THE NUMBERS-

NATURE'S NOTEBOOK

CATTLE

Cattle have been essential to man for thousands of years as a source of meat, milk, clothing, and as beasts of burden. The following are a few species of the cattle family.

The Water Buffalo of Asia is a huge animal. He stands 5 feet at the shoulder and his horns measure 6 feet across. This big fellow loves to wallow in the water, where he is protected from biting insects, with only his eyes and nostrils exposed. Although he looks like a peaceful animal he fears no one. He has been known to attack elephants and can even defeat a tiger in battle. When bred in captivity, the water buffalo is so gentle that herds of them are driven by native children. His great strength is used in pulling heavy carts and farm ploughs.

The Zebu or Humped Cattle of India are considered sacred by the Hindu people. They are allowed to wander wherever they please in India. If a Sacred Cow decides to have a little snack by eating the vegetables in a garden or market, no Hindu would dare object or harm him.

The Cape Buffalo of Africa is only dangerous when hunted. If he is wounded, he will hide in the brush. When the hunter comes near he will charge. Nothing can stop this fierce and powerful beast except a direct hit in the brain.

The American Bison or Buffalo once roamed the plains in great herds of millions. One herd could be 30 miles long and 50 miles deep. When the white man first arrived in North America there were over 60 million of these huge animals; however, by 1900, only 300 were left alive. The Indians and early settlers depended on them for food and clothing and, so buffaloes were shot by the thousands. Indians often killed herds by stampeding them over a cliff. Many of our highways were originally made by buffaloes who knew the best routes to take through mountain passes and across the country.

FOR

STATIONS IN SPACE

On Oct. 4, 1957, the first artificial satellite, "Sputnik I", was launched by Russia. The United States is now prepared to launch one of its own. In order to do this, a 3 stage rocket will probably be used. The first rocket will speed upward at 4000 miles per hour, when this burns out, the second rocket will take over and travel at 11,000 m.p.h. until it reaches an altitude of about 300 miles. A third rocket will then go into action and when it reaches 18,000 m.p.h., and is parallel with the earth, it will "explode" the satellite into space. The pull of gravity makes the satellite curve around the earth while its speed keeps it up in the air. The result is called a "closed orbit".

Artificial satellites or space stations would serve many useful scientific purposes; such as observatories in space or even as "filling stations" for rockets on their way to Venus or Mars. At the present time they would be a great help to radio and television communication. As it is now, the curve of the earth limits the range of television ground transmitters to less than 100 miles; but with 3 space stations revolving around the earth we would be able to transmit "live" television pictures from anywhere on the globe. We could watch a lion hunt in Africa or the Olympic games in Rome while they are actually happening. We could also receive accurate weather forecasts months in advance. This would help farmers and would also help all of us plan our vacations accordingly.

One of the most interesting ideas on satellites is Prof. Hermann Oberth's "Space Mirror". A huge mirror in space would reflect the Sun's radiation. This energy could heat and light our cities. It could also "boil" our oceans' waters and cause vapor and rain during drought.

We are now entering a new and great era of science, the "Age of Space". We must all learn as much as possible about our future in science and satellites.

A precision built camera that is so amazingly small it is less than 1/2 the size of a regular pack of cigarettes and can be taken everywhere you go. It weighs only 2 1/2 ounces and is solid all metal construction with chrome trim. It's got a professional eye level view finder and a single action 1/25th second and time exposure shutter with a precision ground lens that assures you a clear, sharp instantaneous picture. It takes ten pictures per roll on low cost film (standard 16 MM). Makes for beautiful enlargements. So compact and precision made, it can be hidden anywhere and takes true-to-life "spy" pictures that should really provide you with loads of fun and interest. Only $1.98 complete with a free roll of film. Don't delay! Order now.
